

Yogic Action

Whatever one does, it becomes useful if one puts a spark of true consciousness into it.

The consciousness one has is much more important than the act one performs. And the most apparently useless acts can become very productive if they are performed with the true consciousness.

10 August 1966

*

It is the spirit and the consciousness from which it is done that makes an action yogic; it is not the action itself.